Rez Life Car Wash a Success!

Jenny Dewar
The Daglightale

What do you call twenty-one Rez. Lifers holding "HOSIERY" on a Saturday afternoon in September? Give up???... CAR WASHERS!!! That's right. On Saturday, September 30, from 11:00am to 2:30pm, Residence Life staff washed fifty-two cars at Harley's Liquor Store's parking lot. The event was a great success as AUC students, faculty and staff, and members of the Camrose community had their vehicles washed for FREE by the smiling faces of AUC students.

The day was a lot of fun and the best part was the weather! who would have imagined that Camrose Alberta would have a plus Twenty day at the end of September? The only thing that topped this beautiful weather was the response from the community.

Rez. Life had put out a box for Food Bank donations at the Car Wash in the hopes of collecting a little something for the Food Bank the week before Thanksgiving. However, at the end of the day, when the "little something" was counted and weighed, Rez Life was overwhelmed to find more than 70 pounds of food and over a $100.00 in cash donations!! A big thank you goes out to all of those who helped make the day a success and especially to those who supported the Camrose Food Bank.

Without. What does it mean for someone to be without something? Do we consider this to be a positive or negative thing? We often assume, when we hear the term 'without' that it is a material item that one lacks, rather than spiritual or intellectual. Our society has become obsessed with the concept of 'need'. To be without, means that for whatever reason, you are unable to have, but that it is necessary to have this THING. Thus, to our society, you are somehow disadvantaged when you are 'without'. We must ask ourselves why it has become unacceptable in our western society to not have something or rather why we have made it so necessary to go through life coveting things, rather than qualities. It's quality, not quantity... or did we forget that lesson?

Assess what you need. I dare you.

Why do you NEED something? There are definitely things that we need in our lives: love, affection, our basic needs must be taken care of, we like to have people around us that stimulate us, we need goals to reach, and activities to fill our days. This seems simple enough, but somehow along the way, our culture has found that there is more in having THINGS to fill our lives, rather than surrounding ourselves with stimulating qualities

Go without something. I dare you.

Or is there other reasons why we NEED things to fill our lives? Our culture has taught us to fill our lives with tangible things that often we really don't need. We all too often covet things because someone has told us that it is a really great thing to have, or, we are genuinely convinced that having that object will enrich us, our life, and those around us. Now that you have that new car or pair of jeans or whatever, how has it enriched your life, aside from the obvious points that you now look really great to those around you? Why do you buy the products that you do, and not some others? Western culture is one of the few, if not the only one, that judges people on what they have, rather than who they are. We like to hoard rather than share. This is a rather disappointing observation.

Share something. I dare you.

How often do we share what we have? What about the things that we consider to be more important? We just finished celebrating Thanksgiving, when the message for the weekend is to share and to give of oneself. But how many people carry this message with them throughout the year? Too often when asked to give of ourselves, we say "no" and give an excuse about not having enough time, energy or interest. By sharing ourselves, we are enriching those around us. By sharing, we give and receive. Neither person is now without, but rather, both persons now have something far more profound than anything tangible and what they have is far more valuable.

Open letter to the students:

The following was written by K. Cherewatuk, and was submitted as an open letter, by Dr. David G. Larson:

In my scholarly research I recently came across a line in a letter written by a 9th century Carolingian woman to her son, held hostage at another court. Perhaps the situation is analogous to studying at college. I know my mother, and probably yours, could have said what Dhuoda wrote to William: "You will have teachers far more educated than I, but none will ever love you as I have loved you." There is a reason, dear students, why your families were misty-eyed when they left you on this hill, and it's more than the fear of returning to a suddenly quiet house. They have worked so hard, and now they must watch the effect of their teaching at a distance. Honour them through your work here.

Students, to prepare for the year's work, I ask you to think about your best teachers. Be willing to meet the expectations they have placed on you. For them and for us, work hard. Obviously, our success as teachers depends on your success as students. I wish us all the joy of learning, as we together compose this school year.

Letters to the editor can be submitted to F207, before each deadline. They must be signed or will not be printed. We reserve the right to edit for brevity.

Library to start campaign in community

Ken Frederick
The Daglightale

Camrose and area residents will be asked this fall to support the 'To Lead & To Serve' campaign. This is the fundraising drive by means of which Augustana University College will obtain the resources to build on campus a new and needed library.

To conduct the community phase of the campaign, leading members of the district have banded together as the Friends of Augustana. Berdie Fowler, editor of the Camrose Booster, and local businesswoman Vivianne Grue, are co-chairing the 11 member volunteer committee.

It's their intent to raise-- by way of pledges over five years-- $500,000 for the new Chester Ronning Memorial Library. The name will honour the late Dr. Ronning, an alumnus and the school's fifth president, who was a distinguished Canadian diplomat.

When the 'To Lead & To Serve' campaign was launched in April 1994, the university set out to raise $4.5 million for a library building. More than 55% of that amount has been contributed or pledged so far.

Augustana's own regents, faculty and staff, who were solicited before the campaign went public, are going to provide over $455,000. If these campus members-- fewer than 200 in number-- can give almost half-a-million dollars, district residents, of whom there are many more, ought to be able to equal and better their effort, the Friends believe.

They point out that the region and the university are interdependent, and have been for 85 years. There is, they say, "an enduring bond between the institution and the community."

They're having readied, and will circulate widely at month's end, an eight page, tabloid-size publication which will describe Augustana's impact on the district and its citizens. As well, it will invite a response from readers.

Augustana has approached, and received support from most of its constituents. Now it will be the community's turn to lend support, the organizers affirm, and help the university to provide the students with a quality experience and facilities.

Already, head librarian Nancy Goebel is telling Camrosians how urgently Augustana needs this new building: She's addressing meeting of the city's service clubs this fall.

While the Augustana library collection is exceptional for a small university, the facility that houses it isn't. The quarters are cramped and maze-like-- to grow, the campus library has had to fill neighbouring classrooms.

It was created for a student body of 300-- that's how many attended when the library opened 36 years ago; today, over two-and-a-half times that number are enrolled. Back then, the library had 25,000 books; its holdings now top 80,000.

What's being planned to replace this trimful building is a library facility for the 21st century. It will have adequate study space, and sufficient room for the university's growing collections, what's more, "we'll bring as much automation as we can into our library," Ms. Goebel has stated, "and make it as sophisticated a facility as we can."

James Rasmussen, the university's vice-president for development and institutional relations, foresees victory in the fundraising drive: in August, he told the board of regents, "This campaign will be successful because Augustana will have a new library which will meet its needs for many years to come."

Interim President to Come to Augustana

David Shield
The Daglightale

On January 12, 1995, President Johnson set a chain of events flowing as he announced that he would be resigning his post as president of Augustana. Recently, it was announced that there would be an interim president filling the position until the next president took the reigns. We asked Colleen Wilson, the Chairman of the Presidential Search committee a few questions to shed some light on the subject.

When asked what factors led to the appointment of an interim president, Mrs. Wilson claimed that "there is a process in place that is working exactly the way expected." In other words, having an interim president seemed to be in the committee's agenda.

Mrs. Wilson states that the presidential search started in March of this year. At this time, the Presidential Search Committee was put in place. Wilson evaluates the search process as being "second to none". The avenues searched encompassed a vast area of possibilities including: requests for nominations/ applications from all Lutheran constituencies, major newspapers and major employment centres across Canada."

Although Mrs. Wilson would not comment on the number of applicants she has received, she did tell us how the process is doing. "The committee is in the process of short listing candidates and reference checking. Up to three finalists will be identified and interviews will take place. Then the finalists will be visited in their home communities. Then, and only then will the committee make its recommendation to the board of regents."

As for the interim president, Dr. Sandra Anderson, Chairman of the board of Regents told us that "(they) are in the process of determining who will be the next president." The exact date for the appointment has not been released.

Dag Input is Possible!

The Daglightale

Many people around campus are asking themselves and those around them, "I don't know if I can, because I'm not a staff person of the Dag, but I really would like to get something into the newspaper. How can I submit something to the Dag?" The answer is simple: No, you don't have to be on staff to submit something. Any student, staff, or faculty member can contribute something to the paper, be it photos, articles, 'three lines free' or 'top ten' lists. You don't have to be assigned something in order to write about it. If you see something going on, or an issue that you feel is important, that you feel others would want to hear of, WRITE ABOUT IT! Your club or organization is more than welcome to submit things, and is in fact encouraged to. If you have an idea for a column, talk to the editor, who is very open to new ideas and suggestions.

Once you've written something and think that it's perfect for the Dag, you are able to submit it in several different forms: the format that is most encouraged is to submit it on disk, written in Word Perfect 5.1. This saves the staff some time, and uses less paper (but please remember to label it and give a short explanation of what you've written, so we know what we are looking for!) If that is not an option, you can also submit it on paper-- either typed or neatly handwritten. With this in hand, you can take a quick and painless trip up to the Dag office, F207, and leave it in the envelope on the door. Remember to give you name, so that we know who to credit.

The Dag staff eagerly await any submissions that you might have.

The deadlines for the next issue will always be published in the issue prior, but just so you are aware, there is method to their madness: the Dag is published every third Thursday, and the deadline for submissions is always the Friday before. If for whatever reason you cannot make this deadline, please talk to the friendly editor. But don't let the deadline stop you from getting your stuff in early! Unlike in your classes, this deadline is NOT a due date, but rather, the last possible moment that you can get something in to YOUR student newspaper.

The friendly Dag staff await YOUR submissions for future issues.

Supermarket Secrets Revealed

Amber Hughes
The Daglightale

The subject of my submission: a tour through the supermarket, which I went on with my development class.

We went to 'OK Economy' to discuss and analyze social, environmental and political issues involved in shopping at grocery stores. We discussed product associations (when salad dressing is put directly beside vegetables for impulse buying), faulty advertising ("a touch of brown sugar" can mean 1/5 of the package), and general manipulating strategies aimed at keeping you in the store and purchasing more. These include putting milk at the back of the store, the bread at one end, and the meat at another, so that you have to walk the length of the store to get the basics. In the meantime, you are drawn into the centre isles by the displays at each end; notice that children's foods are at their eyelevel.

We discussed numerous other issues, (including the irony of buying bulk, since it's not environmentally friendly with all those plastic bags.) and shared general knowledge of problematic producers like DOLE, ERNEST & JULIO GALO, COKE and NESTLE, who have used various manipulative and even illegal methods of making money.

So, in short, despite the fact that many of you live on campus, you can try to make an effort to be part of the solution instead of the problem of marketing and mass-consumerism by supporting cottage industries (try the Farmer's Market), and think critically.

Rez Rap

Peter Vogan
The Tapestry, Grand Prairie
Regional College

Not many students are aware of it, but a little known document produced by the Queen's Printer for (the Government of) Alberta, called the RESIDENTIAL TENANCIES ACT could be the most important reading material you could run across this college year.

If you are embroiled in a dispute with your landlord (or tenant), this document could be essential to a fair (if not peaceful) resolution of your problems.

A case in point was last week when a student came to complain that a "sweetheart" living arrangement at the beginning of the year had deteriorated to the point that the student feared a mental/emotional breakdown if something was not resolved quickly.

Without revealing a confidence, it was safe to say that had the student relied less on trust and a handshake agreement (which is a very normal occurrence when first-time-away-from-home, trusting students are concerned) and instead on getting all the important aspects of the tenancy IN WRITING, the situation might have been easily solved.

I won't say more on this particular case except to add that the student is desperately seeking another rental situation while at the same time trying to figure a way out to retrieve some of the damage deposit from the old arrangement.

Here are some tidbits of information that could save you stress, tension and perhaps some money:

RENTAL INCREASES-
A landlord shall not increase rent unless giving the tenant a written notice of the increase at least 3 tenancy months (for a monthly tenancy) or at least 90 days for any other periodic tenancy.

UTILITY BILLS- If you are not paying these bills directly, make sure the person who is, especially if it is someone you are sharing the unit with (even subleasing the unit from) gives you a copy of each and every bill! We've heard of cases where the students trustingly gives their partner/landlord a certain amount (say $150) every month for the utilities "and other expenses" and found out they were paying most of the utilities!

BOYFRIENDS / GIRLFRIENDS- All too often a smooth relationship goes to the devil whenever a roommate falls hopelessly in love (or lust) and suddenly there is another warm body around the unit, nose in fridge, butt on the sofa and dirty socks everywhere. Most of the time it is a boyfriend and anyone with any experience can tell you that these creatures rank up there with haemorrhoids as a pain in the butt to remove!

Pardon my anatomy, but it's quite true and has been the ruin of many a poor young tenancy relationship.

The solution: get this kind of arrangement down in writing, or at least make sure you have a clear-cut understanding at the beginning of the tenancy (or before it happens) as to what each person wants and expects.

And remember this one very important thing-third party guests, friends, lovers, boyfriends, girlfriends, you-name-it, are NOT legally part of your agreement. They cannot be forced upon you. And you should remember that if he/she/it causes damage, it will be YOU who is liable for payment! and this also goes for...

UNINVITED GUESTS-
The scariest situations arise where people are inadvertently or intentionally given the impression that "your door is always open" to them. This usually begins early in the tenancy, when friends are led to believe that they can come and go anytime they please.

As relationships progress, boyfriends and girlfriends are the worst offenders as they get in the habit (with your encouragement) of walking in without the simple requirement of knocking! Wrong! Wrong! Wrong!

You could do no greater harm to your personal security than to actually tell people not to respect that most elemental security device- knock and receive permission to enter your unit! It doesn't matter if it's your mom! If you are living on your own, she should knock, thereby showing respect for you and your roommates.

We have cases in the past in the Residence when friends (and much more dangerously, friends of friends) begin to treat the resident's place as their own- a place to come and go when they please and to bring friends whenever they please, especially after the bar closes.

Let me wrap up this column by pointing out the scariest part: if noisy, unwelcome, drunken people do show up, demanding to get into your unit, AND YOU LET THEM IN, you are responsible for their actions if things get out of control!

The bottom line: Draw the line with your front door and keep the trouble where it belongs... outside! (And never be afraid to call police or security for assistance.)

Deer College Kings. The team then starts league play on the road against Red Deer.

Here's just a reminder that during the Christmas break, from December 28 to January 4, the Vikings are hosting a hockey tournament known as 'The Viking Cup'. The teams that are participating in this year's tournament include the North Battleford Stars, the AJHL Allstars, Russia, Finland, Sweden, Czechoslovakia, an American Allstar team, and the Augustana Vikings themselves.

Until the next time, 'see you at the ice rink!'

New Sexual Harassment Video

University Affairs

According to York University sexual harassment advisor Dale Hall, most videos dealing with harassment attempt to portray the matter in purely descriptive terms, presenting it as a problem to be identified and solved rather than a topic open to further insight and discussion. When she discovered her dissatisfaction with such videos was shared by former University of Windsor communications studies professor Rhonda Hammer, they set about creating a new way of portraying harassment so it would enhance rather than inhibit further consideration of the topic.

"What we talked about was to produce a video that was written by students, depicting areas of concern that they had," says Ms Hall. "Not concerns that I had as an advisor, but which they had."

The result is Adjust Your

Set... The Static is Real, a video now being distributed through the University of Toronto Media Centre. The video offers six different scenarios, acted out by students, showing situations such as an emotional manipulation while dating, a dramatic demonstration of homophobia in a bar and a representation of women being isolated in a classroom setting because of their opinions.

Ms Hall notes that each of these vignettes is aimed at upper-year high school and first-year university students. The video reflects the sometimes unclear definition of harassment that these students face.

"Some of the vignettes are difficult to determine if it's harassment, while others are quite blatant," she says. "Rather than telling them this is what harassment is, let's have them talk about what problems they might be having communicating."

For example, one situation features a disabled woman who is asked for a date as she was leaving the library alone in the evening. She refuses, then later tells a friend how uncomfortable she felt being at that time and place; the man meanwhile, tells his friends how frustrating it was to be turned down in this way. An accompanying manual shows how to replay this scenario over again, asking the audience to adopt the viewpoint of a particular character each time.

Although the production and distribution of this video is a non-profit venture, proceeds from sales of Adjust Your Set... The Static is Real will go toward the making of a second video dealing in a similar way with the equally relevant topic of racism.

This new video is available here at Augustana, through Nancy Gooble, one of the school's sexual harassment officers.

Remembering Beijing

Marika Giesen
The Daglightale

Something rather momentous happened in Beijing, China only a month ago. Can you guess what it was? Most of us probably recall the short blurbs in the newspaper or on the radio about the UN's fourth World Conference on Women, but the majority of people probably know very little about what, if anything, was actually accomplished there. I was one of those "uninformed but interested" people until I attended an update of the conference held at the University of Alberta on September 27th.

Five Canadian women who were in Beijing for this important occasion hosted an informal gathering to give other Canadians the opportunity to hear about their experiences. Unfortunately, the lengthy speeches gave little insight into what was actually achieved at the conference. I was discouraged to see so much emphasis placed on the terrible weather, poor accommodations and hectic schedules, rather than on the important issues of women's rights. The evening was not lost, however, as I got a chance, after the forum ended, to talk with some of the speakers about the events in Beijing.

It wasn't until I spoke with the women one-on-one that I was able to grasp just how huge this affair was. Besides the actual UN conference, which granted admission only to government delegates, there was another gathering of NGO's, or Non-Government Organizations. At least 25,000 women, most representing local and national women's groups, met in this separate arena to share, discuss, and plan for a future of greatly improved women's rights.

After ten days of intense discussion and decision-making, delegates of 189 countries emerged, quite satisfied, with a document entitled "The Platform for Action". This document represents a great breakthrough in women's rights that will now set the standard by which all future documents must be measured.

Although Canada's standards of women's rights are ranked amongst the highest in the world, Canadian delegates still went to Beijing seeking grand improvements. As Marj Friedel, a member of the National Metis Women's Organization told me, the issues of the greatest importance for Canada were Gender Equality, Sexual Orientation (Gay and Lesbian rights), and the fight against Family Violence. According to Friedel, Canada made substantial strides in all three fields.

Global concerns that topped the list included FGM, or Female Genital Mutilation, a procedure that many women in Africa and Asia still undergo. This senseless act was referred to by one speaker, Lila Fahlman of the Canadian Muslim Foundation, as "a wicked, stupid and archaic insanity that goes on in the name of religion". Also urgently stressed was the need to recognize and stop the exploitation of young girls, especially in Asia, through a Clause termed "The Girl Child". This is a global attempt to increase educational opportunities for young females who often work for sub-standard wages and are married off at a very young age. The one issue that was a major concern for every country present, and one that pervaded the proceeding at Beijing, was the immediate need to stop violence against women. Banners hanging everywhere reminded people of the ultimate aim of the conference: Equality, Development and Peace for all Women by the year 2000.

It is important to realize that just because this document was signed, does not necessarily mean that every clause will be followed. History has proven, time and time again, that these issues must be continually pushed to have any effect. An International Women's Conference held last year in Nairobi produced a document that was similar, though not as advanced, as the Platform for Action document produced at Beijing. This document was, as Athabasca University professor Barbara Robertson put it, "placed on a shelf to gather dust, rarely implemented or even remembered". According to Robertson, because the Platform for Action is an international agreement, and not bound by law, it is essential that women hold their governments accountable to the promises that they've made. Janet Roberts, a member of Farm Women International, echoed these sentiments in this urging statement: "We are adults. What's happening is our responsibility. Each and every one of us has a responsibility to read and use this document."

I couldn't help but feel empowered as I walked out of the lecture room that day, knowing that I carry not only the ability, but the responsibility to change the way that the world thinks. It is time for us to challenge the old mindset of "the weak woman". We cannot allow our inherent rights and freedoms to be placed high on a shelf, where they, too, will gather dust. Barbara Roberts, I believe, sums up this idea best: "You wouldn't believe the things they (the signatories) promised. Did they think we wouldn't take them seriously? I guess it remains to be seen whether or not we will."

If you are interested in more information concerning women's rights, or wish to join a local women's organization, contact the Alberta Advisory Council on Women's Issues at 422-0668.

The LAST Words on OJ Simpson

Le Duong
The Daglightale

October 3, 1995 was the most edging moment in many people's lives. At 11:00am, the OJ Simpson case was finally closed. The jury had come up with a verdict. As the verdict was read, people glued their eyes to their TV as they watched Simpson's reaction. The verdict read not-guilty. To some, their reactions were relief and joyous. Others had feelings of anger and disappointment. But it can be safely assumed that most were just glad that the trial was over with. As largest trial in history, it seems to have created ripples within society.

This case has even grasped reactions through Augustana. Students who have been interviewed had mixed opinions and this particular survey proved commendable.

For the ones who believed he was guilty and that the verdict was absolutely wrong, their reasons came out strong. The most consistent argument made was about the presented evidence. Many students based their reasons on the mishandled evidence. There was mountains and mountains of evidence, but since it had been mishandled, it was basically "shot down". The jury had no choice but to find OJ not guilty. The finger was pointed at the police for carelessly collecting the evidence. The evidence had obviously proved him guilty, but because of the carelessness of the LAPD, the evidence had to be discharged.

There were also arguments about the whole case of the murder. Was this a trial over murder alone?

Many don't think so. Many students state that it was a trial over racism as much as it was of murder. The defence's case was played by accusing not only the police, but some of the jurors of being racist towards blacks. As even after the verdict was read, the reactions of the Blacks: satisfaction; the reaction of the Whites: disappointment. Some even argue that the racial issue was even bigger than the trial. Another opinion was that people expected him to be guilty because he was black, so the jury found him not guilty in order to avoid the racial issues and possible riots in LA, bigger than the previous one (this is on the extreme side). Some other issues brought up by this trial are prestige, power, and DNA testing.

Speaking of prestige, this trial was made famous mainly because Simpson was a celebrity. He was able to make this trial continue for so long. He was the one who could afford freedom, as some might have put it. He is ever making money off of this trial by selling his book. Some agree that he was let off easy, because he was a celebrity. Others don't believe this was a factor of the verdict, but most find it relatively important.

At the other end of the scale, some believed the verdict was correct and that OJ Simpson should be a free man. They argued that the evidence should have been thrown out in the first place because it was mishandled. Another point was, who would be so careless in leaving all that evidence in the first place? wouldn't a murderer at least try to destroy the evidence? And because OJ was a celebrity doesn't mean he got off easy. He proved himself as a 'normal' prisoner by not getting any special treatment. He had to go to court everyday and that showed his confidence in the case. The trial was also very racial. The police made the evidence point in the direction of Simpson when most of it was mishandled by the police in the first place. Could the police have wanted him in jail because he was "just another black troublemaker"?

Throughout society, many are still debating on this issue though the case is now legally closed. In most minds, the question of guilty or not guilty still lingers in the back of the mind. As for the true verdict, the only one who knows the answer is OJ Simpson himself.

Students experience Canada's Arctic

Susan Brownell
The Daglightale

This past summer ten very lucky students and two professors from Augustana had the experience of a life time. These twelve individuals had the opportunity to canoe the Thelon River in Northern Canada.

The Thelon river is located about 300km northeast of Yellowknife. The group based their decision of choosing the Thelon on the following criteria. The group's number one criterion was that they wanted to see wildlife. Secondly, they wanted a river that had history. Lastly, they wanted a river that would provide a challenge but not be too difficult to paddle. After each student had researched a different river, and presented their findings to the class, the group came to the consensus that they would paddle the Thelon River for the 1995 arctic expedition.

After the group had chosen the Thelon, their real work began. All of the preparations for the 21 day trip had to be made. The group divided into pairs and each pair was responsible for some aspect of the trip preparations. The pairs were responsible for drying and packing food, preparing canoes, preparing a medical kit, obtaining a radio, and generally getting all of the equipment ready for the expedition. On top of this, the group had to read two texts, learn map reading skills and prepare all of their personal gear. After all this preparation, the group was ready to depart on their journey. The group drove up to Yellowknife and then flew to the Thelon river. On July 10th, their dreams became a reality with the commencement of their trip.

An average day on the river usually followed the same routine: The group woke up at around 7am or earlier, and immediately broke camp. They would then have breakfast and start the morning of with a thought of the day. They would be on the river by 9:30 or 10:00. They usually canoed for about 6-8 hours and stopped at preplanned destinations for the night. Along the way, they would stop for lunch, snacks and fishing. They would always stop if they saw wildlife and would stop to go hiking and exploring. After a long day of paddling, they would look for a good campsite and set up camp. The group's evening activities consisted of dinner, hiking, journal writing and socializing.

Every day was anew and exciting adventure filled with challenges for the expeditioners to face. One of these challenges was learning to deal with the horrendous bugs. The annoyance of the mosquitoes and blackflies were a challenge that the group had to overcome. The weather, specifically rain, also posed a challenge to the group. In one instance, 3 people got hypothermia because of the cold and wet. The group pulled together, however, and overcame all of these hardships. The group got along well and were there to pick each other up when someone was having a bad day. The group had to work as a team and were their own little family for 21 days. According to Sue Storvik, who was one of the participants, the group was an "Awesome Team".

This trip is an excellent opportunity for Augustana students. The most beneficial aspect to the trip in the eyes of Sue Storvik was that the group was completely unincumbered by society.

The group had to learn how to survive on subsistence without all of the comforts of home. She also emphasises that the trip is a wonderful opportunity for individual growth and she believes that everyone should have an experience like this.

The arctic expedition is a relatively new program at Augustana and this last trip was only the second time that the trip has occurred. This program is offered every second year as a six credit course and participants are selected through an interview process. The cost of the trip is paid through your tuition costs and the only money the participant has to pay is the airfare. You do not have to be in Phys. Ed. to apply for the program.

The participants from the trip will be doing a presentation later in the year, so keep your eyes open for more information. If you are interested in this program, start saving your pennies and brush up on your canoeing skills, you too could have the experience of a lifetime.

Mexico Trip Update

David Shield
The Daglightale

A group of ten Augustana students will be spending the second semester of their education next year in Mexico, learning about the culture of Mexico, and as well the importance of rural communities in our world.

Each student who goes on the exchange will receive 18 to 30 university credits, learn Spanish, and be directly involved in community service, both here and in Mexico. Some examples the last group gave while they were in Mexico were digging ditches and cutting grass with machetes.

Before the group leaves, Augustana will be host to ten students from the University of Morelos, the corresponding university in the exchange. In Canada, these students will be doing much of the same activities. For the duration of the trip, one Mexican and one Canadian student will be paired together.

An organizational meeting was held on October 2nd, to describe what the exchange was all about. Students who had gone to Mexico this summer with the program related their stories and experiences with the group. Unfortunately, only ten people are allotted to go to Mexico this year. However, Dr. Mundel said that if all went well, the exchange might continue on in later years.

Campus Ministry ROCKS

WORSHIPING, LEARNING AND SERVING IN COMMUNITY WITH YOU

Michael Henkel

Michael "I eat drink and breathe Koinonia week" Henkel comes to us from the far off land of Ontario (where they've never even heard of grain elevators! Can you believe it?). Anyways, Mikey's truly an enthusiastic coordinator, and would be eager to help you get involved in Campus Ministry's "Community" events... so if you're looking for opportunities to be involved this year, lasso Michael.

Vaughn Roste

Vaughn Roste is well known on campus as "the tall guy with all the hair." In fact, if there ever is a hair shortage somewhere in the world, we're sure generous Vaughn will be willing to donate. Vaughn is also characterized by his punctuality and wide-awake appearance (except during daylight hours). Besides being a highly gifted pianist and singer, Vaughn can also speak french even better than Jean Claude Flam Blam. Viking Vaughn is responsible for organizing Bible studies and other learning activities for Campus Ministry.

Linda Kristensen

Linda Kristensen comes from Leduc (French for "the duck"), but her ling heritage, of which she is very proud, is Dutch (naturally being from Denmark). Easily being the best-looking girl at Augustana, her many talents are often displayed in chapel, as she is heard making loud sounds at that large box at the front full of all the pipes. She is Campus Ministry's Chapel Organ Scholar, a title which she relishes for its verbosity and academic obscurity. (When she rattles it off, it sure makes her sound important.) A fluent speaker of English, Danish (or is that Dutch?), German and Norwegian.

Kirsten Boehm

Kirsten Boehm loves aesthetics. She is the artiste of the group. This year you will find Kirsten working with the following media: chairs, candles, hymnals, banners, secret "hot wassail" recipes and friendly smiles. To locate her, look in the nearest sacristy or one of her numerous classes.

Jon Stolee

My name is Jon "someone has stolen my facial hair lately" Stolee. I enjoy mountain surfing and wind climbing. I am a third year "I'm not sure" student and enjoy a good aggressive game of cards. I am the Rock'n Service Coordinator of CMC Music Factory. My job is to whip up a silver platter full of service opportunities for you.

Naomi Querengesser

Naomi Margaret Querengesser is named for her great uncle's daughter-in-law's mother. Her family and ducks are important to her. Evidently her middle name is related to ducks: St. Margrethe-- patron saint of water fowl. Naomi's in her fifth year-- we like to think she came back just for Campus Ministry, but we know she wanted to be like her sister-- it's a family thing. You'll find Naomi singing and involved with music almost everywhere on campus.

Piano Recital a Success!

Colleen Mathon
The Daglightale

For all those who attended the solo piano concert presented by Esther Chu on Friday, October 13th, the musical presentation was considered to be exceptional. Works were performed, by Beethoven (Les Adieux), Franck (Prelude, Choral et Fugue), and Debussy (Preludes). The entire concert lasted for approximately one hour and forty five minutes, with a fifteen minute intermission included. A good crowd showed up which included some of the citizens of Camrose, Augustana University College students and some of the university's professors.

The performance was the first of ten performances being held which help Esther work towards her Ph.D in piano music studies. This is the second concert requirement that she has fulfilled. She is now completing her doctoral degree at the University of Alberta under the instruction of Stephane Lemelin. She has taken piano studies since she was six years old and has spent the last eight years completing her Bachelor's degree, Masters degree, and now continues on with her Doctoral. She completed her Bachelors degree in Taiwan, and moved to Canada five years ago with her family. She also plays the violin as a solo instrument, and prior to her intense piano studies, worked extensively on that instrument as well.

Esther said that this performance was a trial performance and not necessarily her best presentation of the music played. Being that it was her first concert out of ten, it allows her to establish her reaction to the music while playing for an audience. She says that she performs best when she plays for friends. She is not always at her prime when playing for professionals or in front of strangers. She chose to do her first concert at Augustana because Professor Milton Schlosser and her both worked together on their doctoral degrees at the University of Alberta (prior to Professor Schlosser's completion of the process).

Although Esther had no direct opinion of her performance, she was happy enough to say that she has learnt much of the experience. She became more relaxed with her playing as the programme progressed, and by the end of the intermission, she thought that her Debussy performance was notably more controlled. She says that she plays the slower movements that are less technically demanding, better than her more dramatic and technical fast movements. Her performance of an individual section just depends on how well her technique has been mastered for that particular piece. Clearly, her exuberance was noticeable in her performance and in the reactions that the piano presented. The crowd was left mesmerised by the agility of her hands and upper body, and by the emission of smoke from behind the Steinway.

FTC

Michelle Kennedy
The Daglightale

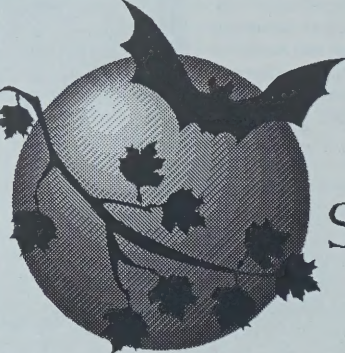

FTC stands for Fall Trainer Conference. Wendy Weinkauff and Michelle Kennedy of the Augustana University College Circle K Club attended FTC in Edmonton from October 13th to the 15th. Members from Circle K clubs in Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, and Camrose met in Edmonton on Friday night. All of these clubs are a part of the Western Canadian District.

Saturday began with breakfast at 8:00am, then we divided into teams of 3 or 4 for a service scavenger hunt. This scavenger hunt included handing out flowers and suckers to people, telling people about Circle K, buying food for the food bank, and giving treats to children in the hospital.

The afternoon was filled with sessions and discussions. We discussed communication within and between clubs, relations between other clubs, and had a game of Circle K trivia. We also learned more about IDD-- Iodine Deficiency Disorder, which the Kiwanis clubs, with the help of Circle K-ers, are working to prevent.

The evening was filled with fun and food. Then we finished the night off with games of pool and bowling.

Sunday there was a district board meeting, then we all headed for home.

Message from the VP external

Sue Storvik
The Daglightale

Here is my first report to you! Thankyou to everyone who came out and supported my platform in the election. Thankyou to all of you who voted, it is the highest voter turnout we have had in years, if ever! Well, I have been working my little #@$* off since the elections. I got the child care program under way -- as it was something that had been requested by some students in the past. It was alot of running around and there was a number of people who were involved in the process of getting something like this off the ground. I must say though, that it was all certainly worth it when I went down to the coffeehouse last Friday and saw the eight kids playing and having a wonderful time together. Thankyou to all of you who were instrumental in helping me put this program together.

Our SU is hosting the next ACTISEC meeting in November. I have been busy organizing this. There will be approximately forty ACTISEC members attending the meeting from other post-secondary institutions across the province. This is very exciting for Augustana, as we get to finally show our school off to the other members. They are all looking forward to coming to AUC as some of them have friends who attend here. This will be excellent exposure for Augustana--and lord knows we need it! Watch for posters in the weeks to come and on the weekend of the meeting consider this your invitation to come out and see what ACTISEC is all about. The meetings are public and you would find them most enlightening. Aside from the meetings we will be planning a night out on the town and it would be more fun if other AUC students join us. It's a great way to meet new people. Just for your information I found a copy of Brad's speech on accepting the ratification of our membership in ACTISEC last spring at the leadership conference. Here it is for you to scrutinize:

"Augustana is excited to be once again accepted as part of ACTISEC. We look forward to being part of the voice of Alberta students through this organization. Throughout our time this weekend we have learned about many issues that will profoundly affect our institution. Through this dynamic opportunity we have seen a place for our institution to be involved with this partnership. Education is our future and through this organization of students we see that our future can be strengthened. As Gandhi once appropriately said, "We must be the change we seek."

Pretty good eh? So there you go--a glimpse of how we are representing you!

Brad, OJ and I went up to Fort McMurray last weekend to the Keyano College meeting. We had a blast, partied with our ACTISEC friends; spent hours in our sub-committee meetings; hashed over many crucial issues for the November symposium that will be held in Edmonton. And that brings me to the issue of the symposium. This is an extremely crucial time of coming together with the provincial government to vision and solidify plans for the future of post-secondary education. You can be rest assured that Augustana will be represented on both the institutional level and by your student union president Brad. We were extended an invitation and are planning to go in fully 'armed'. We will also be represented through ACTISEC. ACTISEC has an extensively and well researched position that will be put forth at the symposium and each particular area of discussion will have our representatives present. You will be well represented as will the best interests of post-secondary education.

We are looking forward to meeting with the other private colleges here at AUC on October 28. This will be a bridge building exercise. After attending the Keyano meeting we are rest assured with the relationship we have with administration with regards to our space agreement and fees collection arrangement, however, some of our counterparts are not in such a 'settled' position. As opposed to the public institutions, recognition of student government is not legislated for the private system, hence, we have no legal protection with regard to our very existence as a legitimate organization. Being members of ACTISEC can only be of benefit when dealing with issues of this magnitude. We will be encouraging the other private colleges to consider membership with ACTISEC, furthermore the ACTISEC 'Road Show' will be coming to give a presentation on the organization. These will be some of the issues we will be addressing with the other private schools.

The SU, in cooperation with Ray Smith from accounting, has just applied to Social Services for a work experience person to come and work in the SU office on a work experience program. This person will be assisting our administrative assistant Lori as well as Avalee with the Dag, Karen with Saga, and will also help up at the radio station. This will be a wonderful opportunity for the SU if our application is approved. We desperately need the help. Lori is always swamped, and Avalee and Karen will also benefit immensely. It just means we will have that much higher quality publications. Keep your fingers crossed that the program goes ahead.

Well, that's about it for this update. My office hours are posted on my door, but here they are for your consumption: Monday, Wednesday, and Friday 1:15 - 3:05 pm. Come up and visit, I'm sure I can put you to work on something, if not, we can do coffee!

The following is how YOUR $125 is spent by the ASU:

As Our Heads Spin, Augustana's Continuing Saga

Avalee Harlton
The Daglightale

A loud cheer resounded as the last dish hit the ground. Tom was mortified. Anything that had previously embarrassed him, now paled in comparison. A small corner would still be too big for him to hide in at this point. Sally whispered to Jane about what a gork that guy was who had just dropped his tray at the feet of Judy. Jane had to agree. Judy was another girl from their floor. She was really quiet and mostly kept to herself. No one really seemed to know her very well, but rumour had it that she had a boyfriend of 4 years back at home. Tom could not even introduce himself to her-- he merely picked up his stuff, squeaked a "Sorry" to her, and left the cafeteria as fast as his feet could take him! As Tom and Dick left the cafeteria, Dick commented that it was a good thing that none of the goulash had landed on his fresh uniform for work.

Once Jane and Sally left the cafeteria, they decided to meet each other at their room, to go together to the 'Golden Arches'. Sally went to the laundry room to wash the stench out of last weekend's bar clothes. Just as she was loading her whites, she was startled to hear someone tell her "Hey! You'd better get that navy sock out of there!" She hadn't noticed anyone else there when she entered, but was pleasantly surprised to see a tall, brown haired, eco-type man, with the most amazing deep brown eyes.

She responded to his advice politely with "thanks- it's a good thing you caught that." As soon as it was out of her mouth, she wanted to hit her head against a brick wall- couldn't she have come up with something a little more cunning than that?

"No problem. I've done it a few times myself, my name is Harry by the way."

"Oh! I'm Sally."

"Nice to meet you. Do you come here often?" Now it was his turn to hit his head against the brick wall. He asked himself if that really was the best pick-up line that he could come up with. No matter really, a wonderful conversation ensued until it was time for the spin cycle, when her machine started making banging noises. He came over to where she was and noted that her load was unbalanced. By now they were standing rather close. They looked into each other's eyes and...

By the time that the girls got to McDonald's they were asking themselves why they hadn't thought of going somewhere closer, like Dairy Queen-- they were famished. As they walked into the restaurant, Jane immediately commented on the flashy red and green uniforms that the employees were wearing. They walked up to the area to place their orders, and then Jane saw him... it was the guy from the cafeteria. She couldn't believe it. She was speechless. She waited until she was at the front of the line and quickly placed her order-- blushing deep crimson the whole time.

She would never forget the first words that he said to her: "Would you like fries with that?"

Snow in September? No, actually, it was imported snow that built a friend for Martin Luther on September 16th, by some enthusiastic First Year students!

One Student's Dreams:

Cherie Klewchuk
The Daglightale

Well, I have, and this is what I dream about happening to me: I will graduate from the University of Regina in the year 2000 or so. Then, I will take a year off to go backpacking through Europe to find myself. After that I want to move to New York City and work for either People, US, or any one of those other magazines as a Freelance Journalist. Then, in about 10 years or so, I want to try my hand at acting in the movies. When I am about 60 years old or so, I want to write my memoirs. Also, I will hopefully be married to the 'man of my dreams' by that time too.

These dreams of mine may seem like fantasies to other people but I personally do not think that they are fantasies, mainly because this is where I see myself in my future. I believe in myself enough to want to go after my dreams. So, this is my advice to all the students here at AUC: REACH FOR THE HIGHEST STAR, IF YOU BELIEVE IN YOURSELF, YOU WILL REACH IT AND BEYOND THAT STAR AS WELL!
